Things to look for in Demo Video/Progress so far

- If the user has not selected to share their location or their distance, a UIAlertController now show up when the user clicks “finish” prompting them to make a selection.

- If the user has not given their event name a title or has not selected any friends (or both) the appropriate UIAlertController shows up prompting the user to complete the necessary action when the user clicks “done”.

- If and only if the user has successfully completed all necessary fields on the Settings screen, then when they click “finish,” the app segues to the main screen.

- If and only if the user has successfully completed all necessary fields on the New Event screen, then when they click “done,” the app segues to the main screen.

- I have started creating a singleton class that will store one instance of variables that need to be accessed globally (such as settings).

Future Goals/Plan of Action

- I will be skyping with Vinay next week to figure out how to integrate the backend so that events can be created, location sharing setting can be saved, etc.

- I need to finish creating a Singleton Class so that I can use instance variables for things such as settings and event information, while making sure that they only get initialized one time. Then that information can be used throughout the app and in multiple views, such as the map view that will need to know those settings. I will also then be able to pass on that information to the backend.

- I still need to look into why a request to the Google server is not being made when the autocomplete places search bar is not the first view that loads in the app.

We walked around 15 km and ended our trip at a golf course.
At the fish market in Sydney! Checking out some small and large octopus. Exploring the NSW Art Gallery, St. Mary's cathedral, NSW library, Chinatown, and other destinations.
Exploring Australia

On the other side of the Sydney Harbor Bridge is the famous Luna Park entrance.

About to watch Rigoletto by Verdi at the Sydney Opera House!

And of course ended the weekend by going to yet another salsa club! (And learned kizomba there.)
